No Series of Small

Dams Can Control

Floods, Says Sturgis

In view of the attempt by upstream towns to postpone or defeat the Millwood dam and reservoir, in favor of a series of smaller structures throughout the Little River valley, it is worth while to-day to quote what General Samuel D. Sturgis, Chief of the U. S. Army Engineers, told his audience Saturday during the dedication services for the Tokarkana Dam and Reservoir on Sulphur river.

Here is his speech in part:

"There is no easy way to control floods. To put a comprehensive and effective flood control system into operation, there are required the passage of considerable time, the expenditure of vast sums of money, and the exercise of much personal sacrifice on the part of public spirited individuals. Difficult as the first two of these three essential elements sometimes are to obtain, the hardest to come by is that of individual sacrifice.

"It is a common tendency to encourage sacrifice on the part of others. Thus, in the field of flood control, we find the downstream city dweller supporting large upstream reservoirs which will protect him, while the farmer upstream wants small agricultural reservoirs which may require buying his farm for the protection of downstream areas. I am confident that such honest and very real differences could and would be resolved in the best interests of the several river basins if it were not for the current popular misconception that flood control—or even flood prevention—can be realized without any great inconvenience or sacrifice on the part of anyone concerned.

"In recent years, the idea that watershed management and small dams can solve many of our water resource problems has captured the public imagination. Regrettably some of the proponents of this idea have chosen to assume that the Corps of Engineers is entirely opposed to their efforts. Nothing could be further from the truth. The civil works program of the Corps of Engineers has one purpose only—to serve the public interest—and we favor without qualification any organization, individuals, or philosophy which is dedicated to the same end.

"The Corps of Engineers firmly believes in and supports soil conservation and watershed treatment where they are properly applied. But I know of no responsible person in government or among civic leaders who will claim that soil conservation and watershed treatment can control or prevent floods of the magnitude of the Sulphur River flood of 1945. I have never heard any responsible official in the Department of Agriculture claim that any small dam plan, even though it involves hundreds of small dams in a watershed such as this, could stop a major flood. It takes large dams and large reservoirs to control large floods.

"There are, no doubt, many cases in which systems of small dams can be justified for the protection of comparatively small areas in upper watersheds but their effect towards the reduction of major floods downstream, although possibly appreciable, will be totally inadequate. The effect of systems of small dams is, therefore, largely local, of principal benefit to the people of the upstream areas. The main purpose of small watershed improvement of systems, including small dams, is generally in the nature of land enhancement rather than flood protection. What is really needed for the protection of an entire river basin is a coordinated system of all types of flood control works.

"A flood disaster like the one which struck the Red River Valley in 1945 can affect millions of people simultaneously and may involve billions of dollars. It is more than a matter of local concern. It has a terrific impact upon the entire economy of a large region."

Disarmament Talks Spurred by Atom Menace

By WILLIAM N. OATIS

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. (AP) — Spurred by the menace of the hydrogen bomb, the Western Powers prepared today for new disarmament talks without knowing whether the Soviet Union will take part.

The 12-nation U. N. Disarmament Commission set up a subcommittee yesterday to start the talks, in private, here Friday.

It adopted 9-1 a British proposal naming Britain, Canada, France, the Soviet Union and the United States to the subgroup.

It rejected 10-1 a Soviet bid to add Communist China, Czechoslovakia and India.

Only Soviet Delegate Andrei Y. Vishinsky voted against the proposal, and for his own amendment, "Lebanon and Nationalist China abstained on the former, Lebanon on the latter."

Vishinsky had warned beforehand that adoption of the British plan, which he called one-sided, would "create difficulties for the Soviet Union as regards its participation in the work of the subcommittee."

Henry Cabot Lodge Jr. of the United States called this "a thinly veiled threat to walk out... a thinly veiled threat to torpedo the peace." Britain's Sir Pierson Dixon asked if Vishinsky meant to sabotage efforts to solve the disarmament problem.

When newsmen asked the Soviet delegate whether he would show up for the first meeting Friday, Vishinsky said, "I do not understand your question." Before the vote he had said his attendance "will depend on the circumstances."

The subcommittee is the outgrowth of a General Assembly resolution of last Nov. 28 and of a Berlin agreement of the Big Four foreign ministers, announced Feb. 18, to "hold an exchange of views" on disarmament. It is to report back to the full commission by July 15.

Ward Three Committees Are Named

Quite a number of desired assignments were discussed. The group voted to distribute in person to every resident a letter explaining the program and to personally urge the cooperation of every resident in Ward 3.

A Good Lesson to Royalty Is Never Have a Wise Man as He May End Up a King

He had everything a king needed to make him happy—a gold throne, honest tax collectors, a big palace, a fat treasury, a five-day week, and a beautiful queen with a minor throat ailment that made it impossible for her to raise her voice in anger.

Anyway, since she was a perfect queen she never wanted to criticize him. This is a fairy tale.

But the king, as he sat upon his gold throne, did not feel like a king at all. He brooded because his people seemed to be unhappy.

So he called in his favorite wise man and asked:

"Why do not my subjects laugh and sing I am a good king with a gentle heart. I do not cut off their heads, and I tax them fairly and, well maybe even a little more."

"Maybe they got troubles," said the wise man, who had some of his own.

"What troubles could they have,

2. He talked in the belief that his remarks would not be a tribute to anybody his mistake as he now sees it, was in allowing the reporters to talk him into a tributing the speech to a "high administration official."

3. He thinks the editors and publishers will greatly reduce the flow of public information if they insist that all "talks" or speeches by government officials to newspapers be attributed.

McCarthy to File Counter Charges Against Army

By HERBERT FOSTER

WASHINGTON (UP) — Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy and his aides planned to file formal countercharges against the Army today and an informed source said they would be "noisy."

The McCarthy bill of particulars was expected to be made public during the afternoon. The informed source said it probably would be eight to 10 pages — "small, but noisy."

Meanwhile, the Senate Permanent Investigating subcommittee met in closed session in hopes of reaching final agreement on ground rules so its televised hearings on the Army McCarthy case can begin on schedule Thursday.

The Army has charged McCarthy, the subcommittee's chief counsel, Roy M. Cohn and its staff director, Francis P. Carr, of using "improper means" to obtain favors for a drafted aide, Pvt. G. Davis Schine. McCarthy countered by accusing the Army of trying to "blackmail" him into dropping an investigation of Red infiltration of the military.

A "tentative agreement" was reached yesterday on rules for the televised hearings.

Soviet Envoy's Wife Joins Her Husband

By ROBERT FREEDEN

DARWIN, Australia (AP) — Blonde Mrs. Vladimir Petrov joined her ex-diplomat husband as a refugee from Soviet communism today after Australian police jerked loaded pistols away from two Russian escorts ushering her in tears back to Moscow.

The 35-year-old woman's last-minute switch to the free world followed a fantastic tug of war in which Australian police wrestled wildly to disarm two of her Russian guards as her Europe-bound plane stopped here on the first leg of its flight from Sydney. The gun-toting Russians had tried to muscle local officials out of talking to Mrs. Petrov.

Eight hours earlier some 1,500 anti-Communists at Sydney fought with police in a vain effort to prevent her from being dragged aboard the BOAC Constellation by the Soviet Embassy second secretary and the two armed Russian diplomatic couriers conveying her home.

White Russians in the crowd said they heard her screaming: "I do not want to go. Save me."

Mrs. Petrov was said by Australian authorities to have been head in back to Russia in the belief her husband had been kidnapped and killed. She had told reporters at an embassy news conference last week she thought he had been kidnapped.

Says Russia More Afraid of the U. S.

WASHINGTON (UP) — Defense Secretary Charles E. Wilson believes the Russians are "much more afraid of us than we are of them."

He said his analysis would indicate the Soviet military buildup has been mainly defensive.

In congressional testimony made public last night, Wilson said he considers the American people "reasonably secure" from an enemy atomic attack.

He told a House Appropriations subcommittee early last February that he does not believe the Russian leaders "are going to start a war by dropping a bomb on us when they know there is going to be immediate and massive retaliation."

"It would depend partly on the time of day they came," he said. "It would depend upon how much warning we had... upon whether they did it now, or three years from now."

He said Russian planes are not as good as American planes.

Army Tries to Prove Charge of 'Informer'

By JOHN L. CUTTER

WASHINGTON (UP) — The Army offered the transcript of a Communist propaganda broadcast today in an effort to show that Col. Edward S. Dickinson was an informer and collaborator while a prisoner in Korea.

Col. C. Robert Bard, chief prosecutor in court martial of the young "Crackers Neck" Va. soldier, promised he would prove a direct connection between the broadcast and the defendant.

Retired Col. Guy Emery, civilian counsel for the defense, argued vigorously against admitting such evidence on the grounds there was no proof Dickinson made the broadcast. He suggested the possibility of voice impersonation.

Col. Richard F. Scarborough, law officer for the court, ruled that the evidence would be received on Bard's promise to prove the connection later.

Insists That's Why Hollyday Was Discharged

By JOHN W. FINNEY
WASHINGTON (UP) — Chief Albert M. Cole said today he asked the White House to get Guy T. O. Hollyday as Federal Housing Administrator because Hollyday did not follow through investigating reported abuses in the housing program.

Cole, who was Hollyday's former administrator, told the Senate Banking Committee he had called the reports to Hollyday's attention for almost a year, that he did not consider the action adequate.

He said FHA investigations abuses frequently were not issued and that when "disciplinary action" was indicated, in many cases it was not taken by the day's agency.

Cole denied "absolutely" that Hollyday was discharged because he opposed a proposal to transfer some of his authority from the FHA. That charge was made by the mortgage bankers Association of America.

The housing chief testified the banking committee "conducting an investigation of scandals in the FHA."

Hollyday, who was ousted last week, told the committee yesterday he was fired without explanation and given no chance to defend himself.

At the outset of his testimony, Cole said he had no belief in provisions of the anti-housing bill should be tightened in view of the housing scandal. He said it is "entirely probable" that abuses in the program occur under the administration program.

The committee, headed by Homer Capehart (R-Ind.), is investigating reports that builders, agitators, houses repeated award of $500,000,000 in "profits" prior to 1950, by obtaining FHA loans that exceeded the actual cost of construction. By the loans were not supposed to be repaid.

Civilian Pilots Help Trapped French Forces

HANOI, Indochina (AP) — thousands of valiant defenders Dien Bien Phu—trapped by closing hosts of Communist Chinese troops—received strength from the skies today. American-supplied Douglas Flying Boxcars, piloted by American civilian flyers, swooped through curtains of fire from artillery and anti aircraft batteries to parachute tons more ammunition, food and war material types into the long-besieged French Union bastion.

Despite cloudy, rainy skies which forced war planes to curtain radically their assault, rebel positions, fighters firing jets and heavy machine guns to knock out the Vietnamese aircraft guns.

my funeral would be a credit to the community."

"The king decided this was an ample cross-section of the public mind."

"Mokey is what makes all my people unhappy," he said. "I think I'll abolish money."

"King, you took the words right out of my oracular mouth," said the wise man.

So the king abolished money. He ordered his people to bring in all their cash, gold, silver and jewels. Since he assured them he had a good gentle heart and they knew he had an army the people brought him all their wealth.

"King, you better let me have all this out-of-date trash and throw it in a hole somewhere where it won't tempt people," said the wise man. And the king said it was okay with him. What good was money?

But the people were no happier. In fact black markets sprang up everywhere, and they had more troubles than ever. So the king announced:

"I guess the people need something to take the place of money. I will issue me an edict saying that from now on kind letters from an employer, recognizing loyal service by an employee, will pass in my kingdom for money."

"Great idea," said the wise man. "Where would we be without a mind like yours?"

This system worked well for three days. For the first time in history, a man could exchange a king note from the boss for a bottle of milk at the grocery store. Then a new order collapsed utterly. It was found out that the bosses had put all their relatives on the payroll, and 9 out of 10 letters they wrote were addressed to members of their own family.

"I will have to use the honor system," sighed the king. "From now on each man will write his own money, but I flatly forbid him to do so except to reward himself for doing a fine job or performing a good deed for a stranger."

By twilight there wasn't an unissued piece of paper left in the country, and everybody but the king had his arm in a sling, suffering from writer's cramp. Riots broke out the next morning, a general revolution by noon, as every man lost faith in his neighbor's signature.

"Dig me up that money quick," the king told his wife man. "These people seem to want their old troubles back."

But the wise man, who was a very, very wise man, had kept his own pocket loaded with gold going all the time. He walked to the balcony, scattered a handful of coins to the mob and said, "Follow me, boys; there's more where that came from."

The wise man turned and tossed more gold coins to the king's bodyguard and said, "Boys, I know you all got your personal woes, and you can solve them anyway you want to. What you do next is up to you."

The bodyguard troops immediately opened the gates. The mob flooded in, cut off the head of the king, stuck it on a pole outside the palace gates, and every man went home and bragged to his wife he had saved the country single-handed.

The wise man took over the throne, married the former king's widow, and they both lived happily ever after. But the new king never hired a new wise man. He didn't want to trust any beginners.

Moral: Only great quacks or great fools try to peddle a salve guaranteed to heal your ulcer, cure a neighbor's child of freckles, and make everybody on earth break out laughing at the same time.

Arkansas Holdup Suspect Identified

MUSKOGEE, Okla., (AP) — Five witnesses today identified Jopel Carson, 41, pardoned Arkansas slayer, as the man who robbed a supermarket at gunpoint last June 4.

Their testimony opened Carson's district court trial on a charge of slaying for which is death, a fate for which he escaped when he was a defendant once escaped when an Arkansas governor commuted his murder sentence of execution to life imprisonment.

Although the prosecution in the current trial pointed out in examining prospective jurors that punishment on the charge ranges from five years imprisonment to death, the jury was not qualified to impose the supreme penalty.

The information against Carson accuses him of taking $295.55 from the store after threatening store checkers Roy A. Coppock and Charles Boswell and customers with a pistol. Coppock and Boswell, Mr. and Mrs. Barney Simon and Mrs. H. W. Vann, all testified they were positive Carson was the robber.

The slayer both remarked that the bandit did not have a mustache. Carson appeared in court with one.

Reserves of Bauxite for Thirty Years

By GORDON BROWN

WASHINGTON (AP) — How are Arkansas' bauxite reserves, the material from which aluminum is made, holding up?

Rep. Norrell (D-Ark) raised that question before a congressional committee.

Here's what he learned: In January, 1950, the U. S. Geological Survey estimated Arkansas reserves at 38,900,000 wet long tons of commercial bauxite and 31,800,000 long tons of what is known as sub-commercial bauxite. That's a total of 70,700,000 long tons in deposits eight feet thick or more.

During 1950-1954, 1952 and 1953 producers dug and used 400,000 million wet long tons of commercial bauxite, so that at the start of this year the reserves total 68,300,000 long tons.

The difference between commercial and sub-commercial bauxite, Interior Department experts explain, is that sub-commercial bauxite has a heavier iron content and presumably is a little more expensive to process.

If the reserves are used at the rate of two million tons yearly, the Arkansas supply would seem to be good for at least 30 years.

However, that is not the full story. The Geological Survey says there are another 18 millions tons of commercial and sub-commercial bauxite in deposits from five to eight feet.

In addition, of course, deposits of what is known as the "high alumina clay" are almost unlimited in Arkansas and nearby states. But thus far no inexpensive way of processing this low grade clay has been devised.

Norrell raised the question of Arkansas' bauxite reserves at a hearing at which Paul Zinner, chief of the Minerals Division of the Bureau of Mines, was a witness.

Norrell told Zinner that a bureau employee had told him the Arkansas reserves were about exhausted.

"I told him," Norrell said, "that this is strange because the Aluminum Company of America has recently constructed an alumina plant in Arkansas costing about 55 million dollars and Reynolds Metals Co. is constructing one now that costs 54 million. I am from Arkansas and I did not know that we did not have plenty of reserves there."

Zinner offered figures showing there is still lots of Arkansas bauxite. And he later supplied Norrell with a detailed report.

While Zinner was testifying, Norrell also asked about progress toward finding a low-cost method of processing alumina clay.

"Are you satisfied that you are doing all you can do to assist the companies to find ways to process this so that it would be economically feasible?" Norrell asked.

"Within the limits of available funds, yes," Zinner said. "Of course, there are a lot of problems that have not been studied and some are very critical."

New Reports of Broken Windshields

By United Press

New reports of mysterious windshield pittings came in today—most as fast as theories about what causes them.

A Canadian scientist said he thought that windshields damaged in various parts of the country might have been pocked by the skeletons of tiny marine creatures literally blown sky-high by recent Pacific hydrogen bomb tests.

A chemist said dust found on pitted windshields resembled dust from a meteor.

Some scientists and many policemen said "mas hysteria."

Other scientists have already suggested dust storms, industrial ash or even smog. An atomic scientist pooh-poohed the idea that radiation from the H-bomb test could have caused the phenomenon.

The damage began several weeks ago in Washington State where hundreds of windshields were reported pitted or cracked—even when parked facing blank warehouse walls or when carefully guarded against vandalism.

Over the weekend the epidemic spread to the Atlantic Coast, although the number of complaints seemed to be smaller in areas outside Washington.

above 60 per cent of the cost.

Cole said he did not want to leave the impression that FHA "did nothing." He said "they did a great deal." But he made it plain he did not think it was enough.

When the questioning shifted to the unnamed "high official," Sen. Burnet R. Maybank (D-S.C.) asked: "Is any secret who this individual is?"

Cole said "It is not a secret," but "I'd prefer not to name him." Maybank did not ask him to.

"Meanwhile, Sen. Harry F. Byrd opened his own investigation of the housing scandals with Internal Revenue Chief T. Coleman Andrews a witness before the joint committee on non-essential federal expenditures.

Sen. Burnet R. Maybank (D-S.C.), senior Democrat on the banking committee, planned to fire questions at Cole on three points:

1. Reports that an unidentified high official of the FHA lost heavily one report said as much as $5,000 in a single night—at gambling. Cole has stated that the reported gambling helped touch off the administrations disclosure of the housing scandal.

(2) Reports that an FHA official, now under investigation, had received a $10,000 payoff from a builder.

Cole said Sunday there was evidence a former official was paid for "favors" and Holiday testified yesterday he asked the justice department last December to investigate charges of a $10,000 "transaction" between one of his aides and a builder. Holiday said he asked the official to resign in January after a five-month FHA investigation failed to turn up positive proof of a payoff.

3. Why the White House forced the summary resignation of Holiday at the same time the scandals were disclosed.

Holiday told the committee yesterday he was ousted by the White House without knowing the charges against him and without a chance to state his case.

Holiday said his dismissal came only four months after the President's advisory housing committee, headed by Cole, had endorsed his moves to tighten home improvement loan regulations.

Holiday displayed no bitterness toward the administration, but he said the President's committee regarded his regulations as "sufficient" to correct home improvement loan "abuses."

Paroles of Six Convicts Revoked

LITTLE ROCK (AP) — Paroles of six Arkansas convicts, including one from Jefferson County, were revoked yesterday by Parole Director Sam Cannon.

Robert Lee Horn, a Negro, was arrested last week by Jefferson County authorities in connection with parked facing blank warehouse walls or when carefully guarded against vandalism.

Over the weekend the epidemic spread to the Atlantic Coast, although the number of complaints seemed to be smaller in areas outside Washington.

of Indian summer, Elaine shivered, as though suddenly an icy wind rushed across the fields from the flame-colored hills. Involuntarily, her feet lagged. She grasped Tom's hand more firmly, but with strange perversity the tender, answering pressure of his strong fingers seemed to crush the last fragments of her courage.

He slackened his pace, too, and glanced down at her questioning. An odd expression slashed across his open, weather-bronzed face and the muscles along his square jaw set defiantly. Then his clear blue eyes softened. His thin lips curved into the smile that, until now, had made everything else seem unimportant.

"It might be a little rough at first, Lenny," he admitted. "But Ma is swell. Really swell. Ever since father died, she's been trying to marry me off. Long before Korea, even. Once she gets over the suddenness of it all. . . . His smile flattened out and his words trailed off, as though he, too, wondered how long it would take.

The knowledge that had darted in and out of all her thoughts ever since Tom had come back to her, flashed in her mind once more. Yes, her mother wanted you to marry. But she had chosen Astrid Nelson for you, Astrid Nelson, of the Nelsons, who farm 300 acres down in the coulees on the other side of those beautiful wooded hills. Your mother will have apoplexy when she finds you've married me. Don't you know, Tom, that I'm even worse than a plain nobody? I'm Clem Allen's daughter. That, to Signe Dahlstrom, will be like waving a red blanket in front of your champion bull.

Fear pressed down on her. Memories, grown indistinct with their apparent unimportance, flooded through her mind with such vividness it might have been yesterday that she sang with the choir in the village church.

Mrs. Dahlstrom wasn't one to be gaping at the awkward teen-agers scattered among the charter members of the group. But from her obscure nook in the choir loft, Elaine could watch Mrs. Dahlstrom. There in the front pew, Sunday after Sunday, sat Tom's mother straight as a fencepost and to all appearances, as impressive. She never turned around to greet a neighbor or glance with curiosity at a new face.

By what witchery, Elaine often wondered, did this aloof woman hold the respect of all the villagers and farmers? It was quite evident the American ideal of equality meant nothing to her. Signe Dahlstrom acted like she considered herself several notches above everybody else. True, she gave a lot to the church. But if she didn't like a sermon she complained about it right to the minister himself.

Just by looking at her aristocratic face and observing her proud carriage, one could tell that her story of noble ancestry was the truth. Her mother and father were that high on the social scale in Norway. They were royalty, almost. It was the bravery and enterprise inherited from their Viking ancestors that had brought her family to America. But ties forever uncut bound them in loyalty to their homeland.

Although no one could say that Signe Amundsen Dahlstrom loved the Norway she had often visited as a child more than her home in Wisconsin, she was considered overbearing of her background. Yes, indeed, her parents were Norwegian nobility. They were not luckless fishermen or tillers of barren soil to whom, in their despair, the new country beckoned as a place where a man could make a decent living.

Yet, as though nobility must always seek its proper level above its own kind, the Amundsen had settled among these fishermen and hard-scrabble farmers. Signe Amundsen would never have married anyone but a man of Norwegian descent. Torvald Dahlstrom certainly was that. Of course, Clem Allen was fine for a partner at a country dance on a basket smile glowing subtly in his blue eyes told her that he could learn to like a small, dark-haired girl with a short, straight nose. Abruptly Madison became a neighborly town and the books slacked at her elbow lost their formidability.

He left for Camp Bragg a few weeks later. The campus seemed empty and desolate. His first letters from Korea seemed to be only the formal lines of a lonely boy shyly pleading for notice at Mail Call. Then his letters gradually revealed something deeper. It was such an incredible thing. Yet, by some twist of fate, she had been Mrs. Tom Dahlstrom for nine days. And now she was terrified.

They reached the back of the house. Elaine clutched Tom's hand like an exhausted swimmer gripping a floating log. Something seemed to thrust her behind him and pull back when he drew her up the three steps to his porch. And the woman holding the screen door open.

"Hi, Ma!" Tom kissed the smooth, tanned cheek. Then he met her puzzled gaze proudly. A little of Elaine's terror slid away. "This is Elaine, Ma," he said. "Lenny" to us.

Elaine felt his strong, reassuring arm around her and her inner trembling subsided. This wasn't going to be as difficult as she thought. Tom drew her close to him and she sensed a certain exultant wonder in his voice when he added, more to her than to his mother, "My wife."

Mrs. Dahlstrom winced as though her son had struck her. A look of almost physical torture distorted her handsome face. Her blue eyes flooded with disappointment, cruel disappointment. As though Tom's announcement had taken away her strength, her arm dropped to her side. The screen door slammed ominously behind Signe Dahlstrom. (To Be Continued)

If a human baby grew as fast as a bee he would need a five-ton truck as a baby carriage by the time he was a week old.

Her mother had left her a rare legacy: The desire to make something of herself, and the will to work for it. Her father had passed on to her some of his gaiety and cheerfulness. No matter what happened, it finally sparkled through. Sometimes in laughter. Sometimes in song. Sometimes in queer little dances, spontaneous and delightful to see. It was this gaiety and cheerfulness that took the sting out of her will and made her friends happy somehow just to hear her say "Hello."

Between the accident and the funeral Elaine made arrangements to work in the village restaurant for her room and board. She could finish her last year of high school. The experience had been rough. But nothing had been so difficult as this meeting Mrs. Dahlstrom and living with her was going to be.

Elaine shuddered. Every muscle in her slim body was stretched taut, fighting to calm the reverberation of her pounding heart.

For a fleeting moment she almost wished that four years ago Tom hadn't paused in his slide over the "hill" from the agricultural campus to grin encouragement at a timid little freshman from his home town. That Tom Dahlstrom would notice her, much less speak, was even more astounding than the fact that she was actually enrolled at the University of Wisconsin.

All her vitality seemed to ebb away under his gaze. Her books would have fallen from her grasp if he hadn't taken them from her. She was certain he heard the turbulent pounding of her heart. Shame at her lack of poise sent waves of hot blood to her cheeks. Certainly, he must be inwardly laughing at her. But, with the inherent kindness that was one of his most lovable qualities, he kept his eyes on the gold-crowned euns above them until her blush subsided.

Glasspox Epidemic Is Buzzing

The epidemic of mysterious glasspox, which has been reported from the Pacific coast where hundreds of cars have been pocked in recent months, is now being reported from the Midwest.

The so-called "ghost" epidemic had not been reported from the Midwest until it was reported from the Pacific coast.

It is likely that some of the reports came from persons who had been told that the epidemic was caused by a virus.

Nasser Regains Rule Over Egyptians

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) Lt. Col. Agamal Abdel Nasser once more was Egypt's boss today, in title as well as in fact, and Maj. Gen. Mohamed Naguib was relegated to a figure head presidency.

In the latest lightning shift in the turbulent Egyptian political picture, the young Army officers of the ruling Revolutionary Council early yesterday switched the premier ship and military governorship from Naguib to Nasser.

The 53-year-old Naguib, who recently lost out in his fight to reestablish parliamentary rule in Egypt, swore in a new cabinet.

The first formal session, lasting less than an hour, was held last night under Nasser. He reportedly outlined general policy. Naguib did not attend.

A decree by Naguib also relinquished to Nasser the military governorship set up by the martial law clamped on Egypt after the 1952 Cairo fire riots.

The 35-year-old lieutenant colonel first took over as government chief seven weeks ago when the Revolutionary Council deposed Naguib, charging him with dictatorial designs. That time segments of the Army threatened revolt, and Naguib was hastily reinstated, first as president and a week later as premier and chairman of the Revolutionary Council also.

Nasser now appears firmly entrenched. He has held behind-the-scenes power in Egypt ever since he engineered the 1952 Army rebellion against King Farouk.

A new Cabinet post, the ministry of presidential affairs, was created. It is expected to have the job of keeping Naguib in a back position where he cannot again threaten the rule of the military council.
